These cases, 105 in number, have been selected as usual from the admissions to the Manhattan State Hospital, emphasis being placed in the selection on the functional psychoses, as indicated in the accompanying table which shows the diagnostic grouping of all the cases. More than half of the total number observed were considered to show dementia praecox reactions. With no preconceived ideas as to the relative importance of psychic or somatic factors in the development of the psychotic reaction in the individual patients, an attempt has been made to investigate intensively all the possible etiological factors, and to collect all the facts available which may lead to a fuller understanding of each patient, with the consequent enhanced opportunity for treatment; the accumulation of such facts will lead to an increased knowdge which may be applied to subsequent cases studied. With such a purpose constantly in mind an attempt has been made in the first place to acquire all possible details regarding the previous psychic and somatic traits of the individual. The results of such studies emphasize the importance of knowing as fully as possible the previous tendencies of a patient in order to understand the psychotic reaction and be able to prognosticate future reactions. The psychic factors have been intensively investigated by thorough psychological studies, with the attempt to arrive at fundamental causes of abnormal attitudes and ideas, and to modify them. On the somatic side, not only have very...
