Although India possesses so many powerful medical plants, yet this little European species is sold in the bazaars under the name of asaroon. Bragantia (6) shows the peculiar formation of the wood of this tribe. B. tomentosa is an extremely bitter plant of Java: some species are natives of India and the Malay Isles. This Tribe is very abundant in the Tropics of South America, frequent in the north of Africa, rare in North America, Europe, and Siberia, existing only in a few species in India. Asarum belongs equally to North America, Japan, and Europe. EUPHORBIACEZE. THE SPURGE TRIBE. Tuass, shrubs, and herbaceous plants, with round or irregularly angled stems, often abounding in an aerid milky juice. The leaves are alternate, rarely opposite, simple, seldom compound, sometimes having stipules, often wanting in the succulent species. The flowers grow on terminal stalks or from the base of the leaf-stalks, variously arranged, sometimes surrounded by an involucre resembling a calyx. The calyx is below the ovary and has various scales and glands, the petals when developed alternate with its lobes. The stamens and pistil are in separate flowers, the filaments free or united, the anthers two-celled gaping longitudinally. The ovary is formed of three carpels connected by a central axis, either stalked or not. The styles are equal in number to the carpels; the stigmas are single and distinct, or lobed; the fruit consists of three dry capsules, splitting and separating from...
