And to such of our Whig friends as have paid us the compliment of being present on this occasion, I would say, in all frankness, that whatever of criticism or of denunciation may escape me, must find its interpretation in reference to principles, not men. To the Whigs, as a party, I unhesitatingly accord integrity and patriotism nothing doubting but that they cherish their principles as sincerely as do I my convictions of the disastrous consequences to which those principles, if pursued, must ultimately lead. At the threshold, I must be permitted to say which I do in no unkind or invidious spirit that the Whigs have sought (and it is to be feared, but too successfully) to make the present canvass for the presidency, strictly personal in its character thus concealing from the public eye, the real principles which are bound up with it, and which must abide its results. Hence their orators, so far at least as they have fallen under my notice, generally begin their speeches...
