Therapies for Children With Autism Spectrum Disorders: Main Report (see also Therapies for Children With Autism Spectrum Disorders: Appendices) - Autism spectrum disorders (ASDs) are common neurodevelopmental disorders, with an estimated prevalence of one in 110 children in the United States. ASDs have multiple etiologies involving both genetic and environmental risk factors. Among the environmental risk factors that may contribute to ASD risk are advanced parental age and prematurity. Disorders within the autism spectrum include Autistic Disorder, Asperger syndrome, and Pervasive Developmental Disorder, Not Otherwise Specified. Individuals with ASDs have significant impairments in social interaction, behavior, and communication. These impairments include a lack of reciprocal social interaction and joint attention; dysfunctional or absent communication and language skills; lack of spontaneous or pretend play; intense preoccupation with particular concepts or things; and repetitive behaviors or movements. Children with ASDs may also have impaired cognitive skills and sensory perception. ASDs are often accompanied by other conditions such as seizure disorders, hyperactivity, and anxiety. The expression and severity of symptoms of ASDs differ widely, and treatments include a range of behavioral, psychosocial, educational, medical, and complementary approaches that vary by a child s age and developmental status. Treatment for ASDs focuses on improving core deficits in social communication, as well as addressing challenging behaviors to improve functional engagement in developmentally appropriate activities. In addition to addressing core deficits, treatments are provided for difficulties associated with the disorder (anxiety, attention difficulties, sensory difficulties, etc.). Individual goals for treatment vary for different children and may include combinations of therapies. Key questions presented were: KQ1. Among children ages 2-12 with ASDs, what are the short- and long-term effects of available behavioral, educational,...
