If you want to make your history teaching more meaningful to your students and more rewarding to yourself, welcome to Monica Edinger s classroom, where studying long ago events and far away places is a vital, exciting collaboration. Monica s fourth-grade students are historians. They consider events from their own lives, use oral history to explore other people s stories, investigate multiple perspectives, and examine documents and artifacts to interpret historical events. They experiment with ways of telling history: writing personal histories, creating picture books, producing research reports, and staging performances. As one classroom teacher s personal narrative on the development, teaching, and assessment of her curriculum, Far Away and Long Ago features: an overview of current issues regarding history in the elementary school; curriculum units ranging from the near to the far, from the recent to the distant past, including topics such as memoir, immigration, Native Americans, and the Pilgrims; detailed descriptions on how each unit was developed, taught, and assessed; examples and analysis of student work; teaching goals and reflections on the complexities of teaching history today. Woven throughout this personal narrative are practical suggestions written by co-author, Stephanie Fins, a museum educator, who collaborated with Monica as she developed and taught her history curriculum. Stephanie provides a rich variety of practical teaching suggestions, topic extensions, and professional resources: Zooming In: informational essays on topics that support the historical content. Booktalks: reviews of relevant professional books. Tools of...
